100 Days

The first 100 days of the Obama administration have been marked by many significant homeland security issues – from cartel violence to cyber security, and from the discussions on immigration reform to natural disaster response.

With the confidence of the president, DHS secretary Janet Napolitano has responded quickly and effectively to these challenges, while pushing for the development of longer-term solutions.

She has eagerly solicited advice from many quarters, including stakeholders outside of DHS who have experience and knowledge in these matters.

We can all feel more secure in knowing that Secretary Napolitano is fully engaged in protecting America against the many threats we continue to face. The secretary's experience, competence, dedication and judgment has shown brightly in the early stages of her stewardship.
